Attitude of American Government Toward Russia Remains Unchanged

WASHINGTON, November 9.— Russin's latest uphenval will not change the attitude of the American government toward measures conditions in the demoralized country. This statement, applying particularly to contracts placed money borrowed from the United and clothing for the civilian population, was the only authorized comment at the State Department to-day upon the overthrow of the Kerensky government at Petrograd. Official advices from the Russian apital still are lacking, no word having been received from Ambas andor Francis since Tuesday, Anparently the British and French governments have not heard from sumed that the revolutionists in control of the Petrograd telegraphs and cables are holding up all diplomatte disputches, an action certain

The situation was discussed at to-day's Cabinet meeting, but Secretury Lausing was unable to add anything to information appearing during the day from Minister Morris at Stockholm, summarizing dispatches printed in the Swedish newspapers similar to those published here, showed that even the Scandinavian countries are getting no news of what is transpiring in Russia, except through the controlled agencies at Petrograd.

Until the situation clears, the State Department and War Department will make no announcement change at Petrograd upon the re-lations of the United States with Russin, and the conduct of the war against Germany. It is apparent that there is still a lingering hope in the official mind that the revolution may be localized in Petrograd, and that Kerensky may escape to rally around him the elements accessary to re-establish his government at Moscow or some other point.

Even falling in this, some of the administration officials are confident that before long out of the present chaos in Russia will emerge a sound and stable government. Secretary Baker voiced this opinion: "I am a great believer in the ability of the Russian people to re-establish themselves. If there is anything to be learned by history, it is that a great people like the Russians will he able to find themselves, and to find that order and liberty go hand in band. The Russians being great people, whatever their present difficulties, will eventually estab lish their government in a proper and orderly way."
